

I voluntarily subscribed to Indiana's law restricting telephone solicitation and marketing. I did this because I strongly resented the invasion of my home by persistent, sometimes rude, and always uninvited phone calls in the evenings, Sunday mornings and at meal times. This law has been extremely effective. When my phone rings, I now know it is a personal call. I strongly opposed any change in this statute that would weaken its intent, or make it easier for any organization to invade the privacy of my home. I don't want to receive advertisements, marketing surveys, political solicitations or any other call of this nature. I strongly request the FCC leave this law alone and let Indiana govern its own.
